David White is a litigator with extensive experience in a broad range of business law issues before the state and federal courts. His career started in corporate, transactional matters, and his familiarity with structuring transactions brings clarity and insight to his practice. He has litigated matters in a number of fields, including banking, petroleum marketing, insurance coverage, and environmental law. Recently, he litigated a dispute between minority and majority owners of a limited liability company in which he successfully urged the court to apply remedies for oppressed shareholders in a corporate setting. He has served as corporate counsel for smaller companies that do not maintain in-house legal staff, and in that way, he has developed an ability to work closely with management in a fast-paced, decision-making environment.
