The Star Ledger has named attorney CJ Griffin as one of its “20 Jerseyans to Watch in 2020.” The article profiles “20 New Jerseyans who are likely to have a huge impact in the Garden State and beyond in 2020.” The paper wrote about Griffin:

Few people understand the ins-and-outs of public records law in New Jersey better than CJ Griffin. A partner at the law firm Pashman Stein Walder Hayden, P.C., Griffin was recently named the head of the Justice Gary S. Stein Public Interest Center and is on the board at the ACLU. Griffin has had a hand in most of the big police accountability and government transparency strides in the last few years, and is currently representing The Bergen Record in a major dispute with the New Jersey Department of Health. Griffin also had a hand in expanding access to bilingual election ballots in the state last year.
