
Is Nesting Right For Your Family?

12.16.15

RELATED ATTORNEYS

Valerie Jules McCarthy

NJ Family Law 4U

For anyone with children thinking about divorce, one of the most important issues to address is how time will be divided with their children, both during the divorce process and once the divorce is finalized. The most common way for parents to address parenting time is for one parent move out of the marital home and the children to go back and forth between their parent's homes. While this may be the most common time-sharing method; for some, due to their financial constraints, it may not be financially feasible for one parent to secure a separate residence during the divorce.

Read the rest of the article.